

HAZARD IDENTIFICATION FOR FEDERAL WORKPLACE INSPECTIONS

Regular workplace inspections are a critical component of a successful health and safety program. Employers are obligated by law to inform employees of the potential and actual workplace hazards, which can be identified through the workplace inspection process. By conducting effective workplace inspections, hazards can be identified and controlled before employees are harmed. However, the workplace inspection process must not only identify hazards, it must also ensure existing health and safety standards and procedures are effective, control measures are adequate, and recommendations are made for ongoing health and safety improvements. Therefore, individuals conducting workplace inspections and making recommendations must be knowledgeable to do so.

Training Solution – Online Hazard Identification for Federal Workplace Inspections Course

Hazards are present in every workplace. They have the potential to cause injury or illness to employees, and if applicable, patrons and visitors as well.

This online course is designed to provide information to Workplace Committees and Health and Safety Representatives regarding hazards an employee might encounter in a Federal workplace, and strategies to reduce the risk of exposure to such hazards.
